

JACOBIN PEGION

Introduce

The Jacobin Pigeon is a domesticated pigeon in Asia, characterized by its lion-like plumage. As one of the world's oldest domesticated pigeon breeds, along with many other domesticated pigeons, they are descendants of the rock square (Columba livia), which is native to India or It is native to the island of Cyprus . They appeared in Europe from about 16th century, then went through 4 stages of development by breeders.

Features

They are distinguished by their lion like fur with a distinctive shape with the feathers encircling the neck and reaching beyond the head, in the dense coat around the neck, extending high above the head and standing upright so that the face of the animal. they can only be seen from the front. The plumage can be a pure white, or there are birds with gray or multicolored feathers. The bird has long feathers, long legs, and a thin tail. Because of limited visibility, this pigeon is almost unable to fly, they only move on the ground and they eat very little.
